THE DAGLIGTALE

The federal election of October 25, 1993 will send Canada into a new political era, or will it? As an undecided voter, I will be following the race closely to better determine the different parties policies. I will be viewing the election through the eyes of a student concerned about education and the creation of jobs. The focus should not be only on reducing unemployment but on the creation of high-skilled jobs that will enable Canada to benefit greatly from the North American Free Trade Agreement. It will take a leader that will look at the long term effects of their policies and not one 'promising' a quick fix.

I should start with stating that I have supported many of the P.C. party's programs such as the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement and the Constitutional efforts to bring Canada together and move forward. We are our own Nation and we should be working together to benefit everyone instead of provinces and special interest groups fighting like they are still under the care of Britain and the U.S.. However, the Tories did not handle Canadian finances properly and lost all hopes of bringing Canada together and thus with the nomination of Jean Chretien, I supported the Liberals. Chretien seemed like the leader who could bring the nation together, but it became apparent that he had no new bonding vision. This lead me to become uncommitted until I saw hope in the form of Jean Charest. Watching him inspired me that Canada could succeed in the new world until he was defeated at the P.C. nomination by Kim Campbell. Campbell has been inconsistent on policies, making me unsure if promised policies will be followed.

The New Democrats are poorly led by Audrey McLaughlin's horrific attempt to separate themselves from their provincial counterparts. The Reform Party is elitist and does not endorse equality for all people. This leaves the Bloc Quebecois and I will not support the break-up of Canada.

As much that I want to believe that each M.P. as an individual makes a difference, I realize that the Leaders make the decisions and that the leader is who I will be making my decision on. It will hopefully be sometime in the next month that I will make my decision and I know that it will make a difference.

Off Campus

No O-Team to move us in
Screaming at heavy couches in sin
Elegant dindin of fish sticks and toast
Hey, we cook our own roast
Roomies go nuts with wild decor
Unravelling inner mysteries and folklore
Rent, gas, water and phone
Bills leave us scraped to the bone
'93-94 will be a fine year
Some might drink a bit o' beer
We'll sing, laugh, tell dirty jokes
We're having a great time
But don't tell the folks!

THE DAGLIGTALE

With a general federal election on the horizon, Augustana students were poled recently to determine how they had voted in the recent provincial election.

When asked, "Did you vote in the last provincial election, and if so, for whom," most of the people surveyed were happy to volunteer the information. There were, however, some who felt that our question violated the sanctity of the ballot box, and as such, constituted an invasion of privacy.

When asked why they had chosen to vote the way they had, most students responded with typical answers, such as "It was the lesser of the evils", "My parents voted for them", and "They looked good at the time".

A number of student responses indicated the amount of effort and research they had put into their decision: "What can I say, I'm from a farm"; "I'm not going to vote for a communist"; "No one from the Reform Party was running in my area".

Surprisingly enough, only one of the respondents replied, "I liked the person who was running", which says to me that most of the students think very little of the political system, and even less of their right to vote.

Student Poll
50 Students asked:
How did you vote in the provincial election?

72% of students voted
Of those who voted:
P.C. 50.0%
Lib. 36.1%
N.D. 13.9%

'Bigger, Bulkier, Responsive' --the Dag

THE DAGLIGHTALE

As we enter into another year, the inevitable questioning begins: 'What's the Dag going to be like? Yes, my children, we have heard you as you talked in all the lines to register, as you hung out waiting for a class to start. Yup, you weren't saying, "What's the Prof. like?" or "What's the food like at the cafeteria?" (Editors' Note: Do you have to ask?) or even, "What's the difference between brake shoes and brake pads in my brand new 1967 Chevy, and does shock tape really hold it together?" Nope, what you wanted to know was how's the Dag? Well, kids and cats (notice the gender neutral, politically correct speak) we're back??? Bigger, bolder and we even wear tights (Editors' Note: only black ones which match the total look ensemble).

We're going to be a fatter bulkier more responsive paper. It's what a Rez page, you got it! Whatever's going down in Rez you'll read it here first (or two weeks after it happened). You wanted a Students' Union page (well you didn't, but too bad you're getting one). Yup, every Council meeting, we'll be there giving you up to the minute (or up to two weeks) coverage. Every burp, fight, bloodbath, heck we'll even cover the story if there are no arguments and everyone's getting along. But wait, there's more, straight from Pravda the Students' Union Executive will provide their own propaganda, on their own page where they will try to convince you that they are working hard and representing you. (Editors' Note: Just kidding, or are we?)

And if you order now, you also get at no extra charge Dr. Roger Milbrandt writing from the Faculty Perspective. Yes, old R.M. will "fuzzify the modification" in every issue of the Dag! (Editors' Note: As you all know, many a Dag columnist has used the profile of writing for the Dag to reach for higher office. Could this be a hidden agenda? Wait and see.)

The Dag this year also sees the return of Augustana's brilliant political columnist. Yes, he will once again in powerful prose enlighten you will his biting, satirical, and always illuminating editorials. This man, who epitomizes charm, charisma has become in one short year the most popular man on campus without once compromising his principals. (Editors' Note: Actually, we couldn't find anyone who fit this description, so we're all stuck with Sandeep again. Sorry.)

And finally, all of our Vikings teams will get the coverage they deserve. . . Well, okay, we'll try to cover their games. Anyone interested in covering their games should contact us.

On a serious note, the Dag is your paper. While we will continue to accept your letters, we hope that those of you who see something you don't like will choose to contribute an article, story, poem, cartoon, term paper, et cetera. And even if you like the Dag as it is don't let that stop you from writing for us. Any and all contributions are welcome.

That's all for now. Welcome back to another year at Augustana where the bright "Lead and Serve" and the politically incorrect (politically unacceptable?) cover it in the Dag.

The Recurring Nightmare

"Off The Deep End"

According to a poll conducted of students on campus 72% of you exercised your democratic right to vote in the provincial election last June. And over 50% of you voted for that good ole boy, Ralph.

You remember that one, don't you? That was the election where the Regressive Convertible Party (led by Ralph De-Klein) convinced Albertans that they deserved another five years to govern our province. Even though this was the party of Don Getty and that Queen of tolerance, Diane Mirosh. Yup, this was Ralph's Team and they were different. Heck, doesn't Ralph really care and listen? After all, he's one of us common folk.

And that little drinking problem he has, well heck nobody's perfect. Yup, that's who the majority of students here at Augustana voted for. The party which has underfunded universities since 1984. The party which allowed our universities to increase our tuition every year since 1984.

But wait a minute. Ralph's different. He's not like that and he wasn't really apart of that bad Getty government. Nope he's gonna change everything and we'll all be happy again.

Well unfortunately, the reality is proving to be a little different. It seems that when Ralph said he cared, he didn't mean he cared about the poor in our province.

Nope, all those single mothers and hungry kids, they're about to lose some of their government assistance. But that's okay, they're all lazy anyways. And for all you less than wealthy students, hang on because you're next. Yup, the Minister Of DeKleining Education, Jack Ady, has announced that he believes that students don't pay enough for their educations and that he favours transferring even more of the burden of paying for our education directly to us. And if you can't afford it? Oh, well you're probably too lazy anyways.

I hope nobody's upset with this set of circumstances because over 50% of those of you who voted, voted for these policies. Yup, by voting for Klein and his pals you endorsed all of these policies.

The moral of this story is very simple. Our new Prime Minister, Kim Campbell has just called an election. She has just spent the last few months trying to convince all of us that she's really different from our favourite ex-PM, Brian Mulroney. Yup, Kim cares. She talks about the politics of inclusion and she's really one of us. And heck, isn't it time for a female Prime Minister?

Well don't you believe it. This is the woman who was a part of the Mulroney cabinet. Every decision that he made, every policy his government created, she supported it. That means she voted in favour of the GST being applied to our textbooks. That means she voted opposed to a motion that would have increased the amount of money we get in Canada Student Loans. And, yup, you guessed it she voted in favour of the 3% tax on student loans.

Now when you consider who to vote for, remember this Government's record on education. When Kim tells you she cares and listens, don't believe it. And if you care about the quality of education you receive, don't vote for the Tories.

Or you can do what many of you did here in Alberta -- forget about the past and vote for a phoney smile. The choice is yours.

Remember this is more than an election, it's our future.

Real Respect for Life

David Kawalaukas

THE DAGLIGTALE

Don't Drink and Drive. Welcome to Camrose. Respect Life.

To quote Saturday Night Live's Church Lady, "Well, isn't that special?" If I had at anytime entertained the notion that moving 300 and some-odd kilometres would not involve culture shock, those three signs at the city limits quickly disabused me of that hopeful thought.

The "Respect Life" part isn't too bad, except for the fact that caring about life only seems to cover the period between conception and birth. Despite the statements by spokesmen of Pro-Life groups that "all life is precious", why is it that, once they have convinced a woman to carry a fetus to term, they seem to think their work is done? If they really did care about all life as they claim, would Alberta, Canada and the world be struggling to deal with the problems of rampant sexual & drug abuse? Would the number of people on the Welfare and Unemployment rolls be swelling day after day? Would the shelters for battered women and the homeless be filled to overflowing?

The basic problem here is not one of intentions, but one of the end results that occur when these intentions are only partially acted upon. If there was a fundamental respect for life from conception to death, then the "Don't Drink and Drive" sign would be unnecessary, as would be the police, the courts, the military, and every other institution who's raison d'être is to control the incidence of, to borrow a phrase, man's inhumanity to man.

The reason we do not live in that ideal world may stem from the fact that most peoples' moral code is nothing more than an outgrowth of their personal survival instincts, i.e., "I will not harm this person, because if I do, something bad will happen to me." Making your desire for personal survival subservient to the need for the family, community, nation or species to survive is not easily done, and is in fact increasingly difficult the further one extends the definition from the individual.

This is re-enforced when one examines recent history. The 1980's have been termed the "ME decade" in which the satisfaction of personal wants and needs was considered paramount. We are now paying the price for that decade of gluttony. Social, moral and economic structures have crumbled, and the next generation is characterized by a flagrant disregard for the needs and rights of their fellow man.

For man to survive, we must relearn the painful lesson that only through cooperation are we able to prosper. Can any one person provide for all their needs, unaided? Not without returning to the lifestyles of our more primitive ancestors, for modern existence requires ever-increasingly specialized knowledge.

That level of specialization can only be utilized effectively when each individual feels that his contribution is matched, recognized and valued by his peers. The fact that this is not the case has led to the rise of many movements, among them the "return to family values" movement. Those promulgating the idea seem to be ignoring several key facts, such as that those "traditional family values" arose in response to the cultural, political and societal conditions of the time, conditions which no longer exist.

For instance, legal and economic structures no longer favour the so-called "nuclear family" to the exclusion of all other family units as was the case 50 years ago. How can it therefore be logical to state that the nuclear family is the best way of living? Would it not be wiser and more effective to discover a means of obtaining the same end result, regardless of whether or not you came from a family consisting of two parents, 2.2 children, and mom stayed home with the kids?

The key goal should be the creation of a state in which every individual feels needed and useful, where tolerance and acceptance become the norm, rather than an aberration. Where there is a respect for life.

When that day comes, all three signs at the Camrose city limit will become unnecessary, because no one will need to be reminded.

THE DAGLIGTALE

Hey, think globally, act locally. There is injustice in our backyards. In Camrose, in Edmonton, in Alberta. The desperate situation of the Lubicon people is one example of the injustices in our backyards.

The Lubicon were completely missed by the Indian agents who established Treaty 8 at the beginning of this century. The Lubicon never signed Treaty 8. They never relinquished the rights to their traditional territory. In 1939 the Lubicon were recognized by Indian Affairs as a distinct community and were promised a reserve on the shores of Lubicon Lake. With the outbreak of WWII, the promises of the reserve were shelved. During the next forty years, the Federal and Provincial Governments sought to systematically undermine the Lubicon community by playing with the membership list, building roads unannounced, and tying the Lubicon in Red tape. When Lubicon land was found to be rich in oil and later in timber, the government harassment intensified.

It is estimated that $5 billion in oil has been taken out of Lubicon territory, and because they do not have a reserve, the Lubicon have not received one penny of that wealth. The Lubicon people are a proud people. Sympathy is cheap and they don't want it. But the facts are this: the Lubicon live without running water. Tuberculosis is a fact of life. In a community where virtually everyone's first language is Cree, children are sent to a school employing only non-native, english-speaking teachers. Colonialism lives, in all its ugliness and disempowerment, and it's in our backyard.

I lived with the Lubicon this summer. I helped people with their gardens, drew pictures with little kids, and played a lot of baseball. They're people, and they want us to know their story, because we can help them live. There's an election coming up. Ask the candidates what their position is on the Lubicon land claims issue. Ask questions. If you want more info, on Friends of the Lubicon for example, give me a call at 672-5316. Think globally, act locally. Rage on.

Funding Needed

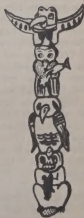

THE DAGLIGTALE

Child sexual abuse is a wide spread problem throughout society. It destroys the abuser lives often causing drug and alcohol abuse, difficulty having relationships and risk of becoming a sexual abuser themselves. The East Central Community Association for Sexual Abuse Treatment (ECCASAT) exists to provide treatment for the victims of sexual abuse, their family members and the perpetrators.

ECCASAT provides a treatment program that is designed for the rural environment providing therapists in rural centres making treatment more accessible to all who need it. Funding for Eccasat is a constant concern.

Most funding comes from the Provincial Department of Family and Social Service, Provincial and Federal grants and community agencies and support groups.

However ECCASAT is in need of financial assistance to ensure their continued existence. A letter writing campaign is underway to raise awareness and to persuade the provincial government to commit to providing funds for ECCASAT. To show your support for ECCASAT contact Jane Cherry 672-7186 or Heather McEwing 672-2249 or Kim Fordham in N114 who can provide a pamphlet, that supplied the aforementioned information, and a letter to sign and send, before September 15 to our MLA Ken Rostad showing your support.

Why the Dag Matters

The 'Scurrilous' Student Press

Dr. Roger Milbrandt

The purpose of education is to learn the truth and anyone seeking to learn the truth will value whatever instruments deliver it.

Since humanity is large and each individual is small, no one can hope to learn the truth without the assistance of those instruments which lie between the individual and humanity at large. These instruments that stand in between, in the middle, are appropriately called the media. Every truth-seeking individual depends on these media and without them can learn very little.

Can the media be trusted?

I have occasionally asked in classes of mine if there is anyone who has ever witnessed an event which was later reported in public media such as newspapers or radio. I proceeded to ask whether the particular event was reported accurately. A consistently strong majority replied that the event they witnessed was not reported accurately but, surprisingly, when I concluded by asked them whether they believe that national and international news as reported in public media is basically accurate they overwhelmingly replied they believed it was. These people - and I suspect they are typical of Canadians generally - trust the media against the witness of their own experience.

Since the greater the significance of the event the stronger will be motives for misrepresenting, I suspect that international events are likely the ones that are most blatantly misrepresented in the media. For example, many readers will probably recall the extensive coverage given to the 1991 Gulf War. Few will recall any of the statements made at this crisis by the Iraqi Democratic Resistance Movement or those made by the Kuwaiti Democratic Resistance Movement because their perspective was completely ignored by North American media and they were denied access to the Bush Administration of the United States. Also, few people are aware that while General Schwarzkopf was explaining on a radio broadcast that the ability of the Elite Republican Army of Iraq to make war had been destroyed and all their helicopters disabled the Elite Republican Army of Iraq was back at work terrorizing the Kurds with helicopters.

Information such as that above is injurious to the interests of those who own and control the media and is kept out of the record of public discussion.

In Camrose, where I have lived for more than twenty years, some of the same patterns are evident. As you read through the Camrose Canadian and the Camrose Booster each week, one thing you can be sure of is that you will find nothing in either the stories or the opinions that will be injurious to sensibilities or reputations of the local professional and business community. These media simply cannot risk offending a community whose economic and social power is decisive. Those of you who come from other communities can probably think of similar ways in which the self-expression of news media is curtailed, not by overt censorship but from powerful and subtle social and economic forces.

In this world of tightly managed "journalism" it is comforting to know that some publications are outside of the immediate control of the most powerful forces in Western society. The Daglightale is among these. We readers of this paper own, control and direct it in a much more significant sense than any of us own, control and direct The Camrose Canadian, The Edmonton Journal, CTV and The Bear.

It is a privilege and a responsibility to which I hope we are equal.

THE GLOBE & MAIL

"Canada's best student newspapers" wrote Keith Davey in his 1970 Senate report on mass media. "are unprofessional, shrill, scurrilous, radical, tasteless, inaccurate, obscene and wildly unrepresentative of their campus audience. They always have been." Still are. But as Sen. Davey noted, they also provide early combat training for an extraordinary number of Canadian journalists, while entertaining, provoking and, on a good day, even informing their readers. So it is with sadness that we mark the death - assassination might be a better word - of one of the oldest and most illustrious of this bratty species, The Ubysey.

Founded in 1918, the University of British Columbia paper stands with The McGill Daily and U of T's The Varsity as one of the Big Three of the student press. Its alumni include Joe Schlesinger, Pierre Berton, Eric Nicol, Pat Carney and John ("Chick") to his UBC friends) Turner. Alan Fotheringham, another one time Ubysey hack, has called it "the best journalism school in the country."

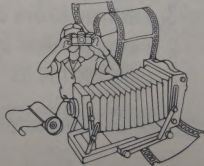

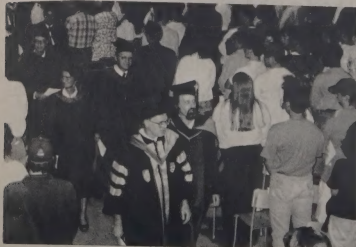

In the past few years the paper has fallen on hard times. Run by a collective with a passion for correcting the political incorrect - ie. everyone but themselves - it has become even more than usually out of step with the views of the average student. This spring it published an editorial, linked to a transit fare increase, giving tips on how to avoid paying bus fares. Another issue contained explicit descriptions of "alternative" sexual practices, complete with racy photos.

This was too much for UBC's student council, the Alma Mater Society, which funds the paper with $28,000 raised from students. As publisher of the Ubysey, it abrogated the paper's constitution last month, purged its incoming editors and set up a ~~managed~~ new publications board with the power to change the paper's editorial policies, scrap its constitution or fire future editors. The AMS said the current staff was welcome to reapply for their old posts, but made it plain that it would rather see them disappear. Protests from Canadian University press, a national grouping of student papers, have failed to change its mind.

There is, regrettably, nothing new in this. As long as there have been student newspapers, student councils have tried to gag them, just as members of parliament periodically try to interfere with the journalistic freedom of the CBC. The justification given in both cases is the same: the paper/broadcaster does not reflect the views of its audience. This argument, a favourite of censors everywhere, is troubling enough when used against the CBC. It is doubly disturbing when employed at a university, where free thought and unorthodox opinions are supposed to flourish. University is a place where people go to have their ideas challenged, not reflected. Newspapers - especially student newspapers - are not mirrors. Because of where they are published, because of the young, inquiring minds that create them, student papers are by nature questioning, provocative - and sometimes thoroughly obnoxious. They are products of youthful arrogance, and youthful creativity.

The Alma Mater Society may succeed in remarking The Ubysey. It may find a tamer, more responsible lot to run it. It may create a paper that better mimics its own views, and those of the student body. It may bury all trace of the unprofessional, shrill, scurrilous, radical, tasteless, inaccurate, obscene and wildly unrepresentative old Ubysey. But UBC will be a far duller place for it.

Point

The Case for Pornography

David Malmo-Levine

THE GATEWAY

Say, when was the last time you saw a really good dirty movie?

Now, I'm not just talking about one of those artsy-fartsy European black & white romantic movies with a bit of tit and a desk lamp conveniently blocking the camera's view of all the juicy fornication. I'm talking about a "hardcore" film (penetration seems to be the operative word here) with a quality script and good direction, well paced, possessing interesting camera angles and Oscar-level acting.

There may be one out there, but I haven't seen it.

Why are there no good dirty movies? It's not because the explicit depiction of sex and craftsmanship are mutually exclusive. Writers such as Henry Miller and Anais Nin have already proven that you can tell tales including penises and vaginas in a very talented, artistic way. Perhaps it's because our culture's fear of sexuality, handed down from our puritan heritage, prevents talented filmmakers from risking their reputations on making good

"filth."

Speaking of puritans, I recall a conversation a while back with one about how if I was truly a healthy minded person, I wouldn't need to watch/read erotic materials, but instead I need only to use my imagination. My reply? Those who enjoy thrilling detective stories need only use their imaginations as well, but they choose to engage their minds in someone else's ideas. By reading about the thoughts of others, no matter what genre, we can only expand our range of imagination.

Some of you are thinking to yourself, "There's a big difference between books and movies." Indeed, this is true. Movies are a much more powerful medium of communication, and tend to drown out any message sent out by the non-visual media. This is all the more reason to have hardcore pornography that respects women as human beings. Without the equivalent of Nin's "Delta of Venus" out on video, those seeking to expand their erotic imagination will have no where to turn but the mountainpile of junk that continues to "cum" off the assembly line.

I am sure there are more than a few of you asking the question,

"What's wrong with the low quality smut I'm enjoying now? Sex is the only reason I buy/read the stuff in the first place, and even if the plots were interesting, I'd only fast forward to the juicy scenes anyway."

Sex does not happen in a vacuum. From the longest, strongest relationship to the one night stand, good sex always involves attraction, cooperation, trust and respect. The trouble with most "pornography" (for lack of a better term for sexually explicit material) is that the sex takes place outside this context.

In most porn, women are picked, not for the diversity of their bodies, but for their uniformity. Why do women spend billions of dollars on cosmetics to look younger and whiter? Why do women starve themselves to death in order to look thin, or put themselves under the knife in order to conform to what the latest "ideal shape" for a woman should be? A good erotic movie should reflect the wide range of beauty that the human race has to offer, not just the particular tastes of some fashion editor or Hollywood producer.

As for cooperation, sex was designed to be mutually beneficial to both (or all three or more) participants. Let's have less stress on the male orgasm and more scenes with both people having a good time, from slow, romantic grunting all the way to genuine screams of delight. Perhaps when the female orgasm has finally reached it's rightful level of importance in hardcore, we won't have so many sexually dissatisfied females.

The plots of most pornos (if they exist at all) are designed to lead as quickly to the sex scene as possible. In real life, however, men and women require a certain amount of time before they can comfortably place themselves in the vulnerable position required for a deep physical and mental relationship. In most pornos, women are expected to hop on their backs and spread'em for every Tom's dick is hairy. There is no communication, no "trust earning" and no respect. Men who have the power to make women submit to them are depicted as sexy and virile. How many rapes originate from the idea that women exist to please men, and that in order to be sexually alluring, men have to be dominating?

Pornography, by Andrea Dworkin's definition, is "the graphic depiction of whores." Let us use this definition, keeping in mind that prostitution will exist in every society, and that a healthy, enlightened and caring society, being a prostitute would not automatically go along with degrading. I agree with Dworkin's belief that materials that depict degradation teach us to degrade. However, I do not agree with Dworkin's "legislation" approach to fighting these ideas. Dworkin herself believes intercourse between men and women is violent. Imagine what she could do to your library if she was the one implementing her own legislation! What would stop such legislation from banning a film like Not a Love Story? "But that film isn't pornography! It just uses pornographic images to contextualize pornography," you say. "Exactly my point," I reply.

By legislating against prostitution itself, our society has driven women into the unmerciful hands of pimps and policemen. What we should be doing is uplifting the role of prostitutes and pornography to the level of "hands-on" sexual education and providing safe, collectively-owned-whore-houses and insightful, contextualized reading and viewing materials to satisfy an endless curiosity we humans have with sex.

Having done this, we can get to work contextualizing the more powerful degrading images found in the Bible, The New York Times, Married With Children, and CNN.

Respect. Essentially it really all comes down to that one little word. When you begin to analyze the issue of pornography you must look beyond the glitz and glamour of the nouveau Hollywood and stare the issue directly in the face. Mr Levine fails to do this. Unfortunately, he seems to have become too wound up in primal sexual impulses and has wrapped his argument in an facade of liberal idealism. He turns a blind eye to the facts and he does not make an attempt to see that pornography is in fact simply exploitation. The trap that Mr Levine falls into is very dangerous; he surrounds himself with the argument that pornography is simply an outgrowth of human sexuality; that prostitution is normal in any society and in his little world, it should therefore be accepted. When I first read this article, I felt truly angered and embarrassed-only because I am also a man I did not want to be lumped into the same category as Mr Levine. Not all men believe that woman are only objects, possessions and/or sex machines. In fact, some of us disagree, and are not actually interested in treating woman solely as objects of fantasy, and yet he walks away claiming complete normality. Not that I'm saying sex is wrong or that I don't think about sex, or for that matter, enjoy it; I do...a lot! It just seems to me that Mr Levine has spent perhaps a little too much time "reading" articles from PlayboyTM in the bathroom, — dreaming about sex, and way too much time alone at home with the remote control in his free hand. If perhaps Mr Levine would spare some time out of his busy movie schedule and make an attempt to actually leave his home, he just might find out that most women are not objects. He might realize that there is more to life than simply pornography, and he may even discover that these women truly are equal in all ways to men (excluding, perhaps, Mr Levine) and in some cases one hell of a lot more intelligent.

Mr Levine's article talks about pornography as if it were something other than exploitive and degrading. It is not. Pornography is not drama, nor poetry, nor art, and that will not change no matter how many books Madonna publishes. Statistics in North America show that 1 in 10 women are beaten by the man whom they are living with or dating. This violence is usually accompanied by sexual coercion but truly accurate numbers are difficult to obtain. I wonder why that is? Sexual assault has been an ignored and concealed crime for much of human history. Countless women have been its victims for centuries, and countless more are restricted both by the fear of talking about it, and the fear of it happening to them. The numbers are getting larger and larger each year. Strange, I wonder if that statistic could be linked to the fact that pornography is one of the five fastest growing industries in the world. Date rape, child abuse, gang rape, sexual assault and harassment are really only buzz phrases, not a real problem in modern society, are they Mr Levine? Hey, why should we stop degrading women, let's take it even further and make it illegal for women to wear clothing. But wait, according to Mr Levine, pornography is not like that—there is no link between pornography and crime, so let's jump on the porno bandwagon with Mr Levine, take our family values and moral beliefs and toss them right out the side.

Personally, I do not agree with your stand on this issue (in case you hadn't figured that out yet, Mr Levine). Perhaps I am going slightly overboard, but I simply am not persuaded by your argument that it is only an outgrowth of our cultures' inherent "fear of sexuality handed down from our puritan heritage (that) prevents talented film-makers from risking their reputations and making good 'filth'".

Puritan heritage or no, common sense tells us that it is wrong to derive pleasure from inflicting pain on another person. Common sense tells us that exploitation is wrong, and even more so if it is sexually motivated.

Mr Levine, do put down your remote control, and wake up in the real world, not one created by your fantasies.

Now, on to the issue of prostitution, because for some reason he feels that he must address this issue as well. I do agree with Ms. Dworkin's argument that pornography is "the graphic depiction of whorers". I also agree with Mr Levine (God help me!) in that materials that "depict degradation" teach us to degrade. Mr Levine also states "that in a healthy, enlightened and caring society, being a prostitute would not automatically go along with degradation". This statement again reassures me that I am not like Mr Levine (Happy, happy. Joy, joy.). He seems to believe that a healthy society is one with the social disease of prostitution, which may have been in every society since the beginning of time, but that does not make it correct.

Prostitution is degrading, whether it is male or female, the simple idea that in order for this person to have a crust of bread, he or she must sell their self-respect and values, in addition to their bodies, repulses me, and yet, he claims it is healthy and caring! He believes that these things should not be legislated against, but in fact elevated to the point where they take a role in sexual education. Well, Mr Levine, the day I have a son who goes on a field trip to a brothel is the day I have tea and crumpets with Lucifer himself. Prostitution is not a healthy way to solve curiosity, it is simply the modern way of hitting the woman on the head with a wooden club. Prostitution is a pure form of degradation and debauchery, and yet he wants to make it a career that a child will one day announce as a future goal on career day, or perhaps even show and tell. I think that society's hope lies with it's children, but that is not the case in the world you envision.

Personally, I think the blame for the degradation suffered by prostitutes falls on the government. The lack of adequate funding for education at all levels of instruction, taxation of student loans, GST on books, being forced to live for months on end with no heat, eating nothing but macaroni and cheese so as to be able to afford tuition make it easy to see why these kids turn to the streets...frankly, it's warmer. Then again, we are only students, and we don't really matter any more than a prostitute does, so I guess it all comes down to respect, doesn't it, Mr Levine?

THE DAGLIGTALE

Hello and welcome to Augustana Information overload days (registration days) are finally over now it is time to hit the local memory making establishments, which is your Students' Union Offices of course.

This year your Students' Union attempted for the first time to put out 'The Student Daytime', we hope that you like it. There are however a few errors that, can be expected with any first attempt. I would like to apologize to those individuals whose names were spelt incorrectly and to those areas that we over looked during publication, we are very sorry and hope that you will forgive us.

THE DAGLIGTALE

Welcome Augustana!!!

So here we are again, it seems that only yesterday we were all saying good bye! You're probably wondering what I've been up to the past 4 months so here it goes...

In May I attended the Canadian Federation of Students general meeting in Halifax, Nova Scotia. I found that there were many inexpensive ideas that we could use right here at home. For instance, an exam registry, so that all students would have access to old exams. Please bring your old exams up to our main office because you could be helping some poor student out. I also got the idea for an emergency loan program for those months when you seem to come up short. Along with this new information I was enlightened with new improved ideas for our safe walk program.

In the past couple months I've been trying to get a "safer sex" campaign on campus. If I'm successful, this week would have safe sex jeopardy, a nurse on campus for one week and the nationally renowned Sue Johanson. (from the Sunday Night Sex Show - 630 Ched 10:00 - 12:00 p.m. Sundays) This year the Students' Union will be making free condoms and dental dams available in our main office. So come on up and get one for a friend or for yourself.

In July I attended an ACTISEE Retreat (Alberta Colleges and

Now on to the future of what is coming-up for the S.U. Thursday Sept. 9/93 there will be a S.U. meeting in the Students' Union Boardroom at 7:00 PM. At this meeting individuals will be reporting on meetings that they attended during the summer months for of the students of Augustana. These reports will include CFS, CAUS and ACTISEE, just to mention a few. Information about the up and coming elections, both S.U. and Federal will be mentioned at Thursdays meeting along with much, much more. I hope to see you Thursday at 7:00 PM second floor F&L Students' Union Boardroom.

Welcome once again to Augustana, I hope that you have a GREAT year.

Technical Institutions Council) where I was introduced to programs from each corner of Wild Rose Country. Hopefully, these contacts will allow me to block book some major acts.

So what am I up to now? Well, I'm presently trying to plan a cabaret for AUC students in October, if any of you have some thoughts on themes you'd like to see used please tell me. My office is F&L 210.

I'm also looking forward to having all of you run up to my office to apply for the following volunteer positions.

- a) L'il Sibs Coordinator - 200.
- b) Fall Formal Coordinator - $350.

Also I need some students to sit as student members on those committees:

- a) Academic Regulations Committee
- b) Curriculum Committee
- c) Library Committee
- d) Student Affairs Committee
- e) Convocation Steering Committee
- f) Western Heritage Lecture S Committee
- g) Judiciary Committee
- h) Chapel Advisory Committee

These positions give you great experience and also look wonderful on any resume.

Friday, September 10th, there will also be a Back to the Books Dance in the Hanneau Centre (Coffee House). So come on out and boogie with us!

Talk to you later!

Excerpt From CFS

The Time For Action Is Now

Today, the need to have a highly skilled and educated society is not just important, it is essential. Our success as a nation in the years ahead will depend upon how well we prepare people, especially our young people, for an increasingly changing world.

In the face of overwhelming evidence of the need to take action, to develop and implement a real national strategy for learning, we as a country are standings till, unwilling to invest the time and money, and exercise the political will, required to respond to the challenge.

In terms of colleges and universities, we, both today and over the past few years, in almost every conceivable way, are making it more difficult for young Canadians to enter the post-secondary education system (including those who want to return to school).

Since 1986, the federal government has cut over six billion dollars in transfers to the provinces for post-secondary education. As a result, tuition fees have sky-rocketed, with increases of up to 210 percent in the past few years, and the quality of our education has seriously deteriorated.

We are one of the only industrialized countries in the world without a national grants program to help students shoulder the financial burden of study. Instead, we encourage students to go further and further into debt. The result is an entire generation of young Canadians who have mortgaged their future, and whose ability to achieve success has been severely restricted. For many others, the thought of assuming such massive debt deters them from studying altogether.

In terms of summer employment, students face a disastrous situation. One in five students can't find the jobs they need to help them return to school - over a quarter of a million students this past summer.

We have created in our society a generation of young people who are angry, frustrated and without hope. They are left with a very clear message - no one cares if they succeed or fail. Surely we can do better. We have to.

A Message From The VP External: Volunteers Needed

Are you one of the thousands of Canadians that received a student loan this year that will not meet your basic needs? Are you frustrated because you must scrape to make ends meet because of inadequate funding to post-secondary education by the Canadian Government? Like the above article states, the time for action is now, and the next two months are going to be a very busy time for the VP External office.

With a federal election call just around the corner, our Students' Union, and unions from across the country will be preparing a campaign of their own. The purpose of the campaign is to increase the awareness of the importance of post-secondary education in our country, and to make post-secondary education an election issue. The nationwide theme used for this campaign is "Make Your Mark...Vote Education". This slogan hits upon a number of key themes of our campaign, as Carl Gillis, National Chairperson of the Canadian Federation of Students explains: "Firstly, it addresses the importance of making an investment in education; an investment in our nations human resources. Secondly, it speaks of taking action; of harnessing the anger, the cynicism, the frustration, and in many cases the hopelessness many of the members [of the CFS] feel, and transforming it into a positive force for change in this election. Thirdly, our slogan speaks to the need for students to get out and vote."

Your Students' Union has already begun to prepare for the tasks needed to accomplish this election campaign goal in many ways, however, many of the events have been set only tentatively because as this is being written, the election has not yet been called officially. Some of our plans include hosting a candidates forum at the school open to both students and the public, doing presentations at local clubs and organizations (Kinsmen, Rotary) to get across to the community of Camrose the desperate condition of post-secondary education in our country, and running "Vote Education" ads in both the

Dagligtale and Camrose

Canadian, just to name a few things. To pull off our goal requires a lot of hard work and so I am inviting ANY students interested in helping out with the campaign to come up and talk to me in F210. Myself and all the volunteers will become known as the Election Readiness Committee. The success of this campaign depends on the number of dedicated individuals that come out to help spread the message: VOTE EDUCATION!

Also from the VP External office comes the need for people to serve on the Media Policy Board. The Board requires five students whose job will be to evaluate all student media policies and to make recommendations as appropriate to the Students' Council. It also serves to review any written complaints from the students about student media (newspaper, radio station, yearbook) and deal with the complaints accordingly. All five members have full voting rights and the board is chaired by myself, the VP External. If you are interested in sitting on the board, please come up to the S.U. office (F213) and fill out a Students' Union Board/Committee Application Form.

That's all for now. I hope your first week back at school is a great one!

First we'd like to welcome you to the wonderful world of AUC. If you're a returning student you'll know what an oxymoron that is. Anyway, by the time you read this there will already have been a D.J. meeting, so if you missed it Where The Hell Were You? Since we still have time slots left we won't hold it against you. Give Mairead or Andi a call at the S.U. Office at 679-1541 and leave a message.

Time slots are generally for an hour per week. If you want to D.J. with a friend that's okay too. We will be up in the station for the week of September 13-17 training D.J.'s so if you're interested come on up and visit us.

CLCR is owned and operated by the Students' Union. We are a cable station so that means if you're silly enough to try picking us up on the FM band it won't work! If you have a stereo you can screw your cable cord into the back of your tuner. If you're poor like us and own a crappy little ghetto blaster you need to touch the wire coming out of the cable cord to your antenna. If you have an inlet in your room you can put a paper clip in it. (No you won't get electrocuted) and it will boost the signal in your room so that your antenna can pick it up. Our cable extends throughout the entire city of Camrose so off campus students can pick it up too. If you're having trouble picking CLCR up give us a call and we will be able to help you out.

This station is owned by the students as a whole so don't be afraid to give us your input.

College Radio has traditionally been a medium for new and upcoming bands to get airplay and to get known. We are not a corporate station that play lists to the gills. Our D.J.'s are allowed to choose their own music. However, we strive not to be top 40 station. If you're looking for Top 40 there are hundreds of other stations out there for you. If you're open minded and looking for something different and a little bit crazy CLCR IS FOR YOU!!!

If you have any questions, put downs, complaints or even compliments or pick up lines feel free to contact us.

Resident Life: Programming

The programming portion of Rez Life has grown over the past few years with events becoming larger and better than the year before. This year should be no exception.

Once again, Kimberly Webb is the Programming Coordinator for Rez Life. Along with her valuable experience gained from last year, she brings enthusiasm to this developing program. This year Rez Life has created the opportunity for greater involvement for two senior RAs, Karyn Morrison and Bill Owen.

This semester's theme is safety. Along with safety, the two other areas that will be covered are alcohol awareness and sexuality. The three groups overseeing these areas have already come up with great ideas. We will be cementing these ideas and coming up with dates within the next week.

In an effort to get the students more involved with the community of Camrose and to give back to the community for all of its support for AUC, we initiated community oriented events. Last year was the first time for the Rocky Road Ice Cream Fest. Due to its success we will be holding another one in February. The R.R.I.C.F. was an event in which we invited the kids of Camrose to AUC for ice cream and an afternoon of activities. The proceeds went to the Boys and Girls Club.

Also in wake of the success of the R.R.I.C.F., we are planning another community oriented event for the first semester. The plan at the moment is to put on a benefit concert with the proceeds going to buy turkeys for families who would normally be without at Christmas time.

We will be needing some help with the community events so if you would like to get involved, talk with an RA.

In the next issue of the Dag, we will let you know more about the programs that we will be doing and their dates.

If you have an idea or a question, feel free to approach Karyn, Bill or Kimberly. Kimberly can also be contacted at 679-0565.

O-Team Thank You

On behalf of all the students living in the First Year Complex, thanks to the O-Team for all their great work. Your energy and enthusiasm made us feel welcome and definitely made our parents feel better when they didn't have to move in all my stuff!

As far as Augustana University College is concerned, the words thank you just don't seem adequate. You made Sunday one of the smoothest move in days ever! Your gift of time and energy on that day helps to make an anxious time more bearable. I had several parents comment on how well things went. Special thanks must go to Dale Swanson, who gave again of his time to ensure things went well. All of us owe Krista Davison a big hug! Her work in organizing the entire O-Team experience really paid off.

Welcome from DRLSA

As Director of Residence Life and Student Activities, I can't say enough how glad we are to have you here. You heard at Opening Convocation the Dean's formula for success, the two hours outside work for every hour in class...the same action can be said for residence life and student activities. You are going to get out of your life here exactly what you put into it. You'll never have the number of opportunities to get involved that you have here. GET INVOLVED!!!! There will be elections for SU positions, for Residence Hall Council position, you could get involved in a wide range of clubs and groups, and the list goes on and on. If you have questions about where or how to get involved, please stop by the top floor of the Faith & Life Centre. Student Services and your Students' Union are here for you. We look forward to seeing you often.

Remember your parents...

As students move in, we in rez life are always concerned with their adjustment to university life and living in a community setting. I had the chance on Monday to talk with a parent on what affect her daughter going to university, staying in residence, had on her. I must preface my comments by saying - I know the following story may not relate to you and your family situation... but I hope it does!

As this mother and I spoke her eyes swelled with tears. Her first child went to university 4 years ago and she was missed terribly, but there was still her younger sister at home to help ease that transition. This past Sunday night, while her new university student daughter was meeting floormates and settling into her new home, she (the mother) was staring out the front window crying. Their home seemed 1000 square feet bigger since her daughter left she told me. She shared her hopes that this time, her second time, the transition would be easier - it wasn't. She did express some relief that as they live close by, she will be able to hear from her daughter often.

I share this story with you to let you know how your parent(s) may be feeling. They have high hopes for you and your education here at Augustana. Please remember them in your struggles and in the joys you experience. Communicate with them frequently. Be sure to thank them for everything they have done. While I have yet to meet the perfect parent, most did their best to make you what you are today.

Ice Cream Social

Judging by the amount of ice cream devoured at the ice cream social Tuesday night, and the long but fast moving line ups, the first event of the year sponsored by the Student Activities Office was a big hit. Just over 600 sundaes were feasted upon with every flavour under the sun being enjoyed by all. This event was the finale to a great happening - The Kickoff for the Campus Division of the Library Campaign. Watch for more details as things progress!!

Life in the Ravine. For students in the First Year Dorm life across The Bridge often looks like an enigma. But once you've been there for awhile, life in the Ravine kinda' grows on you. Just ask the Chytraces.

How is it to be a Ravine-ite? One can always look forward to those cardiovascular work-outs running across The (new and improved) Bridge and the infamous Long-Stepped Stairs. This year's Ravine-ites are the proud new owners of a paved Circle and a fledgling computer room in the Commons Lounge. The computer room isn't quite ready, but the intention is to improve service to students by centralizing all of the computers which were previously in each of the dorms.

Part of living in the Ravine this year is the opportunity for each dorm to set its own intervisitation hours. Each dorm will go through a process based on consensus and compromise to set the new hours. It's an opportunity for each student to take responsibility for and have a part in creating her/his own living space.

So hey, that's a little snapshot of the Ravine. I'm the Ravine Hall Coordinator, and you can find me upstairs in Anderson. Drop by; have tea. Have a great year at Augustana, and come check out the Ravine.

Robert Ford

THE DAGLIGTALE

Welcome to everyone! Before I begin prattling on about what it was like in the olden days, I would like to introduce you to some great folks that I have the privilege to work with.

In the First Year Dorm, there is another Hall coordinator with whom I work with, Chrissie Worth. Chrissie is from Calgary and is in her third year of English here at Augustana. She lives in the Hoyme suite with her cat Basil. Over in the Ravine Dorms, Lynnette Wray is at the helm. She comes from Sexsmith and is working her way through a Science-Psychology degree - Wow! Lynnette spent her summer with an work project in Little Buffalo which was sponsored by the Mennonite Central Committee. Kimberly Webb is a music major and the Residence Life Programming Coordinator. She is from St. Albert and her primary responsibility is to make sure that residence programming occurs and is of excellent quality. Finally in the Ravine lives Mark Chytracek and his family. You can find them in the North wing of Moi Hall.

Now about this business about the message from Grandpa... I have been here a while (not nearly as long as Mark!), since September of 1986. I have my degree in Biological Sciences from Augustana.

My first impression when I moved in was to say the least, unpleasant. You know how the wonderful O-team works their butts off to move new students into the First Year Dorm, well, we had no O-team way back then but that was mostly for traffic control during the opening day. Rather than coming down Luther Lane, we came up 44Ave, after waiting in line for hours we unloaded our stuff and then negotiated our way out of the circle and back down 44Ave. Did I mention it was a hot day, yeah it was quite warm. This whole business of one-way traffic down Luther Lane came as a result of a contingency plan. A few years ago there was so much rain that 44ave was so muddy, two-way traffic up and down that road would have been a disaster. So, the way down Luther Lane stuck and is the option of choice on move-in day. Now, about the dorm on my first day, well, I need to keep some ideas for the next issue of the Dag!

Tour of the Dag Office

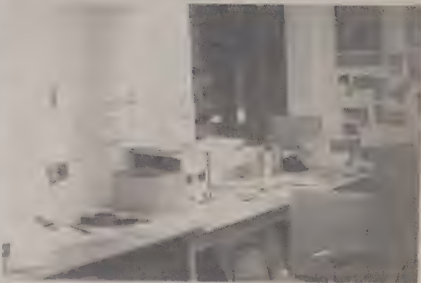

This is an attempt at a Dagligtale tour by Mark Heinen, Dagligtale Editor (advertising and layout), Mark Evans, Dagligtale Editor (reporting), and Sandeep Dhir, Dagligtale Editor (editorials).

Sometimes coming to the Dag room can be kinda confusing. Hmmm. What can we do to help out our students? Well how about we show them around the Dag room? But they aren't even here yet... So we'll pretend, and we'll take our imaginations. So, what do you guys think of that idea? Sounds familiar, let's give it a try. We might as well start with the table. This is our table, it holds our computer. Neat, eh? This computer is the one that we type our columns on. Even the one you're reading right now! No way, Mark! Are there any bathrooms in here, Mark H.?

Why, no there aren't, Mark E. You must walk down that long hallway to find one.

Now over here to the right of our table, we have a window. From this very window, you can see the whole Ravine. Under this window, is Mark H.'s chair, this chair holds Mark H., the maker of truly awesome scotches. Oh, Mark, you and your scotches!

Now, over here is another table. This table is where the Yearbook editors create their never ending "Saga". Oh, look, there's a box of Crayolas! Next to this we have our light table. Light table? Yes, you plug it in and it makes the lining on the paper show up. Wow, eh! Over the summertime, there were a buzzillion little fridges.

Aaaahh - the attack of the killer fridges - oh no, oh no!!! Whew, I was afraid of those little guys.

Now inside this door here is the Darkroom. You know, my first year, I never knew why it was called the Darkroom. It took me a whole year to figure it out. Why is it called a Darkroom, Sandeep? Well, Mark, that is because you must develop the pictures in the dark. Oh, I see now, Sandeep.

Well, that is it for our tour. A welcome to the Dagligtale from Sandeep Dhir, Dagligtale Editor (editorials), Mark Heinen, Dagligtale Editor (advertising and layout), and Mark Evans, Dagligtale Editor (reporting). We all hope that this will be a great year at the Dagligtale. We have been working hard - not! over the summer in preparation for school. Now that it is here, "work hard and play hard" but most of all, be drunk while you do both! Our motto - Learning is a box of Crayola crayons, that's right boys and girls, Crayolas! Crayons symbolize a time when we were in kindergarten. So, when you get down in the year, pull out the old, well-used Crayolas and remember kindergarten.

If you have any ideas for the next issue of the Dagligtale, don't miss our

THANK YOU O-TEAM

This year's O-Team was phenomenal!!! They put their heart into this year's Welcome Week, and made it into a great success. Your enthusiasm and passion for Augustana was enjoyable to watch, as well as being extremely catchy! Many parents approached me and commented on how well you guys did. On behalf of all students at Augustana I'd like to send out a big THANK YOU! You done Good!!

THE DAGLIGTALE

O-Team got off to a great start this year as the O-Team members arrived Friday night. After their thirst quenching reunion I was impressed at how many people made it to the meeting Saturday morning. Starting Sunday morning O-Team worked really hard to move 369 new students into the freshman complex. With lots of hard work we even managed to get virtually everything except the kitchen sink up to the third floor. The tour Sunday night was successful and I hope everyone is now able to find their classes. Monday night Bowling was fantastic, it's just too bad the "boys" could not keep up to the "Women." Swimming was also a Splash! My personal thanks to all the O-Team members, I would still be hauling in suitcases if it was not for you. To the new students, welcome to Augustana.

P.S. You're moving yourselves out.

Council Chatter

THE DAGLIGTALE

Welcome to another year at Augustana. As we, the Students' Union, plunge into the academic year of 1993-1994 we must remember that decisions are being made about the activities we attend. The organization making these decisions is the Augustana Students' Council. Augustana is a liberal arts institution, meaning we, the Students' Union, must take the information given and make intelligent, informed judgement on the issues at hand.

As the Dag reporter covering the Students' Council, I will report to you what the council is doing and then ask you to decide if these decisions are the ones you want your representative to make. If you do not like what is being achieved, do something about it. If you do like what your reps are doing, take the time to thank them, it's a tough job, but someone has to do it. Until the next issue I hope you enjoy this column and have a great school year.

And No One Cheered

Christopher Spencer
BLISS MAGAZINE

The five o'clock sunrise did not paint the sky extraordinary hues of pink and yellow, dismissing the fading night with a colourful celebration of dawn, of birth, of beginning. Barricades were not erected on the streets in anticipation of swarming, jubilant crowds, drunk with joy and satisfaction; pride. No bands played. No horses trotted. No flower kissed floats sailed like ships in the morning breeze. And no one cheered.

On that morning, and in that fashion, on the 23rd day of June, 1993, Canadian parents opened their eyes in a country where all children - male or female - may grow up to serve in the position of Prime Minister. Kim Campbell, a woman from British Columbia, accepted the Governor general's request that she form a government, appoint a cabinet and swear an oath of loyalty to the Queen of Canada. And then it was over.

Who forgot to organise the parades? The phallic world of men in their castles yanking away at the levers of power had lost its blood supply: the patriarchy was governed by a mainiarch! We had arrived. This had to be it - the just society, the new world order, equality in our time, paradise on Earth...

Uh-uh. Sorry. No way. Canada's first female prime minister pleases neither feminist nor conservative women. In Kim Campbell's own riding of Vancouver Centre, the New Democrats have nominated a prominent lesbian activist. The Christian Heritage party, which also recently elected a female leader, is courting Bill Vander Zalm(). So much for the spare rib revolution.

"I think Kim Campbell, when she faces the electorate, will receive votes for her qualifications, not her gender. People will vote for the best candidate."

The words belong to Margaret Leabey, founding chairperson of the Alberta Advisory Council on Women's Issues, special adviser to the Right Honourable Donald Mazankowski, and unsuccessful Tory nominee in Edmonton Glenora. Should she run for election in the future, she says, she doesn't want her sex to be an issue.

"People always have to come first. I believe men and women should be treated equally." Her belief that Ralph Klein would be a more effective listener than Nancy Betkowski led her to support the former Calgary mayor against her own female MLA in the provincial leadership vote last year.

Leabey understands that feminism can be a difficult word for a Conservative politician. The party embraces Maureen McTeer, who has served on the executive of the National Action Committee on the Status of Women, and Chantale Devine, a founding member of REAL Women of Canada, which emphasises spiritual and traditional values. There is a "healthy debate," she says, but no consensus.

"Feminism today - it is totally how you define it. For me, feminism is the freedom to be myself, the freedom to achieve." Leabey's approach is individualistic: empower people to help themselves. It is a definition which neither NAC or REAL Women would find particularly attractive. They share a preoccupation with communal concerns.

Victorious in a West Edmonton riding in last month's provincial election was a woman who disagreed publicly with her leader on the subject of private abortion clinics. Karen Leibovici is one of just 16 women who will sit in the new Legislature, and while she is not enthusiastic about the percentages (20 per cent female MLAs to 80 per cent male), she does believe more women will seek office in future elections.

"I think that we [female politicians] are not afraid to make our points of view known. We must make the whole notion of politics more accessible. We've got to bring it out of unreality and make it more tangible."

Leibovici's candidacy for the Liberals was made possible by the changing political climate. "It is easier to influence a party which is forming than one which is established," she says. All across the political spectrum, women have realised new opportunities to participate in the electoral process. Political philosophies are not defined by gender. Women do not form a cohesive voting bloc to which governments must promise eternal allegiance or face damnation at the ballot box. Kim Campbell will not receive 51 per cent of the popular vote in the next federal election by virtue of her mammary glands.

But the mute bands marching in celebration of Canada's first female prime minister carry an interesting time. XX and XY may be interchangeable at the top; however, it is the middle which feminists - and traditionalists - wish to change. Viewed from Left or Right, the focus of the several women's movements is to alter the nature of society itself. Kim Campbell, PM, well, that's just small potatoes.

Oil is Thicker than Blood

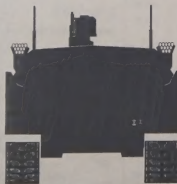

Mark Evans
THE DAGLIGTALE

Unless one was living in cave all summer you would not have been able to miss the atrocities that are occurring in the war torn countries of the world. We have been inundated by the media with pictures of starving, maimed, orphaned children. In our own living rooms we were able to witness the sorrow and the devastation of these people lives. Meanwhile the United Nations does nothing, stating that the situation is too dangerous. A mere two years ago the UN led by the United States and Canada, I am ashamed to say, came rushing to the aid of Kuwait to create a new world order where this type of carnage would not be tolerated.

Oh, it is not that nothing is being done, the children who suffer through their horrific existence the cutest way possible receive a token gift of pity from the western countries. The cute but suffering child gets whisked away for a miraculous operation everyone is interviewed on television, then the are not heard from again. Do they send these children back to their war torn "home" to be shot at again? What about all the other children, their parents, and their grandparents are these lives not worth saving?

Perhaps if these people were barrels of oil, the western countries would be more likely to respond to the plight of these people.
